

IAEA mildly reprimands Iran over suspect nuclear sites

Categories : Nonproliferation policy, Publications

“After more than a year of stonewalling about apparently undeclared nuclear material at a site in Iran—and months of refusing access to two other sites—the Islamic Republic of Iran could have been in for harsh condemnation when the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) Board of Governors met on June 19.

Iran hawks in and outside the US government wanted a finding of non-compliance with Iran’s safeguards agreement with the IAEA and a report to the UN Security Council to buttress their campaign of “maximum pressure.”

Read the full article, originally published on June 22nd, 2020, by The Atlantic Council, here.