

Should the U.S. Really be Testing Nukes Now?

Categories : Government, Publications, U.S. Strategy

“Trump administration officials are reported to have recently discussed conducting a nuclear test, breaking a moratorium the U.S. has observed since 1992. Such a move is not necessary to ensure the continued reliability of the U.S. nuclear arsenal. It could also increase threats to U.S. and allied security by giving a green light to other countries, including dangerous proliferators, to conduct nuclear tests of their own.”

Read the full article co-authored by Lieutenant General (Ret.) Frank G. Klotz and William Courtney, originally published on June 10th, 2020, by Newsweek, here.